

Hurricane Katrina

When Mike Dillon heard that the victims of hurricane Katrina needed help he could've written a check, as so many generous people did, but instead he gave more than his money to the effort; Mike gathered up a crew and flew to New Orleans in his Huey. If you click on the image below you'll be able to read about Mike's heroic contribution from an article that appeared in the December 2005 edition of Popular Mechanics. If you prefer you can access the pdf directly here.